Every year, National Grid hosts Gilbert Stuart Middle School at a PawSox game at McCoy stadium in Pawtucket, Rhode Island. This year the Company also hosted City Year, a program that pairs young adults with at-risk youth. Check out some highlights from the event!

Below, students, faculty, and National Grid employees enjoy a cookout before the game. The cloudy weather couldn't dampen anyone's spirit! PawSox pitcher Robby Scott even stopped to take pictures with the kids.

During each game, National Grid hands out a "Hometown Hero" Award to a recipient who has made a positive impact on his or her community. This game, Justin Roias received the award for his outstanding work during his tenure at City Year. Pictured below with Timothy Rondeau, one of the National Grid employees who helped organize the event.
